WHEREAS, This year the peoples of the world will celebrate the 30th anniversary of the United Nations on October 24, UN Day, and this is an appropriate occasion for people everywhere to renew their adherence to the Charter ideals of peace and human rights and their determination to promote economic and social progress and a greater measure of justice and freedom for all; and,

WHEREAS, This year finds us at a turning point in world affairs. We sense the promise of a more peaceful world and the opportunity for new strides in international cooperation. To maintain this momentum will require still greater efforts and more effective international institutions. We need to create new arrangements to control new technologies for the common good. We must continue to recognize the interests of rich and poor countries on matters of trade and aid. Equal rights for all peoples must become a reality in fact as well as law; and,

WHEREAS, Important steps have already been taken by the United Nations in meeting these challenges. The UN has once again provided a mutually acceptable mechanism for carrying out the next steps toward peace in the Middle East. The 7th Special Session of the General Assembly marked a beginning of a new relationship between the industrialized and developing countries on economic matters. The International Women's Conference held in Mexico City this summer adopted a World Plan of Action which includes virtually every aspect of contemporary life--civil rights, education, employment, health and nutrition, among others:
